Facing the Future of Climate Change in NJ

Wed. July 24, 2019 | 6pm-8:30pm

Lower Cape May Regional High School

687 Route 9, Cape May, NJ 08204

Join the discussion with a panel of experts to assess the latest scientific research on the topic of climate change, from rising sea levels to environmental impact to quality of life and economic issues.

WHAT: Free, open-to-the-public panel discussion with Q&A on the impact of climate change on NJ.

Learn how the Garden State is affected by changing weather patterns and storms like Hurricane Sandy, and the resulting state and local strategies to combat it.

See clips from NJTV's documentary on climate change, Facing the Future, a local companion to PBS's national Sinking Cities series, produced by WNET's Peril and Promise initiative.

PANEL (subject to change): George T. DiFerdinando, Jr., MD, MPH, FACP, Steering Committee, NJ Climate Change Alliance & Chair, Princeton Board of Health; Dr. Daphne Munroe, Associate Professor in Shellfish Fisheries and Aquaculture, Rutgers University; Jenny Shinn, Program Coordinator Haskin Shellfish Research Laboratory, Rutgers University, and Dr. Lenore Tedesco, Executive Director of the Wetlands Institute in Stone Harbor, NJ.

Walk-ins welcome. Pre-register to guarantee a seat.

RSVP by email at betancourts@njtvonline.org, by phone at 973-233-8398, or visit www.njtvcommunityforum.eventbrite.com

CAN'T ATTEND? Watch via livestream at NJTVonline - YouTube

NJTV's In Your Neighborhood Initiative is made possible by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation.

Peril and Promise: The Challenge of Climate Change is a cross-platform public media project from WNET in New York reporting on the human stories of climate change, designed to provide context and fact-based journalism to public media audiences, on air and online. Find all stories at pbs.org/perilandpromise. The views expressed in the programming do not necessarily reflect the views of the sponsors and partners.

Successful Collaborations between Conservation Groups and Farmers

Monday, July 29

10-noon

Duke Farms

1112 Dukes Pkwy W, Hillsborough
Township, NJ 08844

Continuing the series of meetings convened by the Foodshed Alliance and the New Jersey Land Trust Network, this gathering will provide examples about how conservation organizations are partnering to encourage agricultural production. An update on New Jersey initiatives designed to connect prospective and established farmers with preserved farmland will also be described.

Foodshed Alliance
Sustainable Agriculture Enterprise (SAGe)

In partnership with
The Nature Conservancy and Ridge and Valley Conservancy

Program:

Sustainable Agriculture Enterprise (SAGe)
Kendrya Close, Foodshed Alliance

Farmland Advisors New Jersey
Erica Goodman, American Farmland Trust

The Field to Farm Project
Amanda Brockwell, Monmouth Conservation Foundation

Carbon Farming and Lessons Learned from the Incubator
Michael Catania, Duke Farms

Discussions will be encouraged throughout the program. You are encouraged to continue the networking and information sharing during lunch (at your cost) at Duke's onsite Farm Barn Café.
